

[LKWCD Current]

Fall Issue

November 30, 2016

Happy Holidays!

Water Levels and Rainfall

One month remains in this wet and wonderful year of 2016. As we just celebrated Thanksgiving, I'm sure that we all gave much thanks for all of the rain that this year produced. The rain events have given us record high water levels in many wells for months now and November was no exception. This month, to no surprise, water levels were still on the rise as irrigating has ceased and we continue to receive rainfall. Many wells in all three counties, again, were reaching higher levels than they had ever been since our monitoring of them began. This month we have received 1.99 inches of rain here at the office and there is a high chance of rain for the entire first weekend of December. With more rainfall expected in December, I predict that next month, when I measure again, water levels will have continued to rise. With not much more to report until late next month, I wish you all a very merry Christmas!